Leadership Guidance

What 10 skills do resilient companies possess?

Lasting companies are able to navigate changing markets by performing well in 10 tangible and intangible ways, such as using analytics, having empathy, mastering and operating at scale across geographies, says venture capitalist Robert Siegel. "It's not only the competencies of digital and physical but understanding broadly how systems and groups interact with each other, and the consequences of these interactions," Siegel says.

Leaders must adapt to changing relationship with staff

The pandemic has put employees in many industries in a position of power they haven't held for a long time, and leaders must be prepared to adapt to that relationship shift to attract and retain qualified staff. Employees who have had a taste of remote working have myriad reasons for wanting to maintain a remote or hybrid employment arrangement -- some work-related, some purely personal. Managers should be flexible about working arrangements, instill a sense of purpose in their teams and proactively engage employees about what they want to see in the workplace.

3 things to do before pursuing new-business growth

Companies that invest in areas complementary to their core business should ask whether the new businesses should be integrated and who should lead such a unit, according to this McKinsey analysis. When seeking such growth opportunities, employ data analytics to "use sophisticated network analysis to parse and find connections among hundreds of unstructured text data sources, such as company descriptions, patent filings, academic papers, and web pages," the authors write.

USDA Thrifty Food Plan has been updated

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) today released an evaluation of the Thrifty Food Plan, used to calculate Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits. As a result, the average SNAP benefit – excluding additional funds provided as part of pandemic relief – will increase for Fiscal Year 2022 beginning on October 1, 2021.

Survey: Most shoppers prefer indoor mask requirements

Shoppers trying to navigate the latest COVID-19 surge are more likely to wear masks indoors, and 64% said they believe grocers should mandate face coverings, a survey from New Hope research reveals. Fifty percent of those who responded said they "will definitely" wear masks indoors, up from 39% in July, while the percentage of those who said they were unlikely to wear masks inside public spaces dropped from 12% in July to 6% in August.

Childhood Hunger Will Last Beyond Next Year; Biden Administration, Congress Must Extend Free Meals Program

In this op-ed, Maryland Hunger Solutions Director Michael J. Wilson and Executive Director of the Maryland Chapter of the American Academy of Pediatrics Loretta I. Hoepfner urge Congress and the Biden administration to support Healthy School Meals for All by implementing legislation that would permanently provide free school meals to all children. While USDA waivers have been allowing all children access to school meals at no charge, those waivers are going to expire after school year 2021–2022. The School Nutrition Programs are valuable but have been unable to reach all students. The Food Research & Action Center notes that too many children who depend on free school meals are left out due to the programs' structure. California and Maine recently became the first states to pass legislation for Healthy School Meals for All, but the authors argue that we need a national policy instead of incremental state-by-state initiatives.
